Let Mediation Help to Build a Bridge

East Lothian Community Mediation

Mediation explained

- Mediation is a positive way for people in conflict to find practical solutions to their difficulties
- Mediation is a voluntary process. If people want to resolve their differences, our trained mediators meet everyone involved separately
- We listen to what people say about their situation, help people decide what they'd like to see happen in the future and, by bringing people together, find a solution everyone can live with
- Everyone puts forward their views. Our job is to make sure everything goes smoothly.

We will

- Meet with you, listen to your views, feelings, concerns and suggestions
- Help you find common ground and consider suitable solutions
- Allow you to withdraw at any stage if you are not able to continue
- Help you work out a practical agreement that everyone is happy with

We won't

- Take sides, decide who is to blame or judge you in any way
- Come up with solutions or tell you what to do
- Insist that you meet with those involved, if you feel that you can't
- Put anyone in a situation where they may be at risk

Nine out of ten meetings end in an agreement

If there are special reasons why people can't meet in person, we can sometimes arrange to help resolve the dispute without a meeting.

Our Guarantee

Of course we can't guarantee that every problem will be sorted out, but many of the neighbourhood problems we help with will be resolved. That's why the police, housing departments, advice agencies and community workers all recommend us to people. To make sure you are in safe hands, here's what we can guarantee:

- All staff and volunteer mediators will be polite and efficient
- All our mediators are highly trained
- We work according to strict rules of confidentiality
- We have been operational since 1999
- We are independent and never take sides
- You can stop at any time if you are unhappy with the process and no one will force you to continue.

Every year in Scotland there are thousands of problems between neighbours. Often, differences are settled quickly and in a friendly way but sometimes it's not so easy. Modern life is stressful, soundproofing can be poor, parking is difficult, our children lack safe places to play and often we don't know who our neighbours are.

It's no surprise that sometimes we need help sorting things out.

That's where we come in.

Our mediators are trained and experienced people who are able to help you find a way forward that everyone can live with. Thousands of people from all over Scotland have found practical and peaceful solutions to problems with their neighbours through using our service.

And what's more, it's free!
